

Conditions for Submissions
(for digital publication at www.EPSpress.com/authors)

- a. The pdf must be read-only (that is, no enabled macros, etc).
- b. The pdf's are published normally as is, unless the author chooses to re-do typos or other errors after our feedback & approval and re-submits a new pdf.
- c. All reasonable submissions will be published with no blind reviewing. Thus there will be complete transparency (as in certain blogs), with the emails functioning as the proof of correspondence and content.
- d. EPS Press reserves the right to determine what is reasonable, but, in the interest of starting public dialogues that Plato would approve of (unlike manuscripts that cannot answer back when readers have questions), will publish any submission that is of at least excellent graduate-student quality.
- e. Submissions by any current or previous faculty at a post-secondary institution will have automatic acceptance.
- f. EPS Press may well add an Update following the examples already on the site, addressing the new work. The Update may be as short as "This topic was covered on pages XXX of publication YYY, and requires no additional comment," although, for this particular response, authors would probably be notified so as to save them embarrassment. That is, they would be given a chance to re-do the piece after reading the relevant publications or withdraw the submission.
- g. Graduate students are reminded that in addition to the adage "Publish or Perish," there is another, "Publish and Perish," and to write and submit accordingly. They are strongly advised to have colleagues or a mentoring professor read the submission first for feedback.
- h. The author's affiliation, current or previous, or status as "independent scholar" or the like should be given at the end of each submission and should be verifiable.
- i. For questions and submissions, contact info@EPSpress.com.
